

Starting a Business has great Advantages

Owning a business allows a person to control their income and gives them flexibility.

June 24, 2005 -- We live in a very insecure world. Many people are wondering how they can make life for themselves and their families a little bit better, a little bit easier and a little bit more comfortable. We live in a two income society and most people must have two incomes just to survive. Even single parents often have two jobs just to make ends meet. So, if you are working two jobs for someone else, can you ever hope to improve your life?

There is a certain amount of security in working for someone else and knowing that on certain days you will have a set amount of money. Also, working for someone else often offers benefits such as health insurance that can be vital for a family. But, have you ever considered the fact that you are working eight hours plus a day to make someone else rich? How about this? If you need more money for something that unexpectedly comes up, can you go to your boss and ask for more hours? Sometimes you can but most of the time you can not.

Kathy Anderson, President of Lone Peak Business Solutions, Inc. states, "I have been a business owner for 26 years and mother of seven children. In those years I have come to realize the advantages to owning my own business. It has literally saved my financial life more than once."

Two of the best advantages of business ownership are:

1. Owning your own business gives you flexibility. A business owner often is able to arrange schedules around family instead of scheduling family around a job. It also gives one the ability to be there for school events, sports events, graduations, weddings, etc.
2. Owning your own business gives you the opportunity to choose your income. Many business owners have a spouse that has a employee type job. What happens if that spouse gets laid off or is not able to work? A business owner has the ability to market his/her business and increase income.
